

HEALTH PROMOTION/RISK REDUCTION INTERVENTIONS WITH VULNERABLE POPULATIONS TRAINING GRANT

The Health Promotion/Risk Reduction Interventions with Vulnerable Populations Training Grant is supported by the NINR- institutional research training grant mechanism. Our program reflects the exciting and conceptually coherent integration of two foci: health promotion and risk reduction interventions and vulnerable populations. The goals of the one to two year post-doctoral fellowships are to prepare scientists to study the fundamental mechanisms underlying the health promoting behaviors of individuals and aggregates, and test the efficacy of theoretically valid and culturally appropriate interventions for vulnerable populations. Training support is available for a one- to two-year period. Annual stipends are set by NIH based upon years of experience since doctorate. Additional funds are available to cover conference and research-related expenses. Learn more about the HPRRVP postdoctoral fellowships at:

The School of Nursing and University of Michigan faculty have expertise in health promotion/risk reduction across the lifespan with vulnerable populations from numerous specialty areas, and the resources of the School of Nursing and University Centers are available to guide the fellowship experience.
